

Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA)

The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) is a federal law enacted in 1974 to protect the privacy of student education records.

Educational officials are able to access a student's record ONLY if they have a legitimate educational interest pertaining to their job.

FERPA defines an educational official as:

- A person employed by the institution in an administrative, supervisory, academic, research, or other support position
- A person serving on an institutional governing body
- A person employed by, or under contract to, the institution to perform a special task, such as an attorney or auditor

By signing this form, I understand and acknowledge the following:

- ☒ I declare, in viewing applicant/student records, that I have a legitimate educational interest in the applicant/student's academic record.
- ☒ My access does not include viewing student records from another UT Dallas program or discipline for purposes outside my legitimate educational interest.
- ☒ I will view documents and materials for the specific purpose of admission or resolution of a student-related issue and will not use or re-release acquired information for any other reason.
- ☒ If I do retrieve a student file flagged with a FERPA notation, I may release NO information about this student.
